expresses the true
meaning of happiness
that lies behind

Virtue is the beauty of a person. It is what makes them lovely and unusual. It is the colour, form, shape of their personality. It is the way they do things, the way they move, speak and dress. They may have no money, but if a person has virtue, they will always seem rich, for everything that is close to them will be filled with quality. Virtue shines outward into everything, into the body, into the environment and ultimately into the fibre of the planet itself. It fills what is empty, heals what is sick, settles what is troubled. * But underneath virtue must be silence, for silence is the gold that sets off the jewels and protects them from scattering. In silence a person can see how the wealth is to be spent, where to invest it and make its value grow. * When silence and virtue characterise the relationship between two people, there is harmony. When silence and virtue live together in one person, there is perfection. Perfection is a possibility; otherwise there would be no word for it.
